

Caption: Colcas (storehouses) and Inka officials, 1615. Surplus food, clothing, raw materials, and other items were kept in state storage facilities called colcas. This system guaranteed the survival of the empire and its people in years when harvests were poor. Drawing from The First New Chronicle and Good Government. Courtesy of The Royal Library, Copenhagen (GKS 2232 4^o).