

Caption: A khipucamayuc, 1615. Inka officials used khipu, devices made of colored strings knotted in various ways. Khipu were used to record census data, the movement of goods and people throughout the empire, and religious and military information. The officials who managed the khipu were known as khipucamayuc. Drawing from The First New Chronicle and Good Government. Courtesy of The Royal Library, Copenhagen (GKS 2232 4°).