

---

“According to the First Nations Development Institute, food sovereignty is defined as ‘the inherent right of a community to identify their own food system.’ This means that as a community we have the power to choose the food on our table.”

Valerie Segrest (Muckleshoot), NMAI Interview, August 2016

---

Valerie Segrest is the director of the Muckleshoot Food Sovereignty Project.